The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: The prior art fails to disclose or render obvious the claimed combination including: a spray head for a spray gun, comprising: a central body with a space therein; the central body having a lateral side and a lateral aperture passing through the lateral side; the central body having a top side, at least one inner abutment located in the lateral aperture at the top of the central body; a rotary element which is placeable in the space of the central body by passing the rotary element through the lateral aperture of the central body; a seal in the central body below the rotary element for sealing the rotary element leak-tight in the central body; into the space in the central body, a nozzle with an exit from the central part of the rotary element; the lateral aperture being shaped such that with the central part of the rotary element in the rotary element having a circular shaped central part and the central part is introduced the space in the central body, upward translational movement of the central part brings the central part into a working position against the inner abutment at the top side of the central body, the central part of the rotary element being so shaped and the nozzle being so placed on the central part of the rotary element that the nozzle has a working position with the central part of the rotary element abutting the inner abutment of the central body and that the nozzle in the working position is above the top side of the central body.
